Pack the Van

By Blair Foley

Two guitar amplifiers, a hand-relixed mexican telecaster in a heavily stickered road-case, a taylor cutaway electric-acoustic, a bass cab the size of a small refrigerator, two pedal boards in hard shell cases, a four-string fender p-bass, four microphone stands (one with a goose-neck), two 18-inch sub-woofers, two active three-horn JBLs, 200 feet of extension cords, six power strips, a 32-channel console built atop a rolling cart with a stage-box, four in-ear-monitor receivers and a split snake, a folding tables, two cardboard boxes full of CDs, vinyl, T-shirts, stickers and lighters, a black zipped duffle bag with seven various microphones (individually wrapped), 12 tangled XLR cables, eight quarter-inch instrument cables, a 100-foot 16-channel split-snake, two 50-foot speakON cables, extra packs of strings, slides, a chromatic set of 12 Hohner harmonicas and a life size cardboard cutout of the lead singer. The drummer and keyboard player of course will be driving separately.

There is no applause when the trunk slams on a perfectly packed van, no award for carefully coiled cables or a tote of band T-shirts arranged perfectly by size and color, and yet the unseen labor of entertainers is an art in itself.

The necessary work of packing and unpacking an entire band's equipment is indeed a profession in and of itself, a craft learned only by doing, and mastered only by those most generous of spirit, or most short of cash.

As roadtrip season approaches, and ensembles are carefully considering how to take their show on the road, I tip my hat to the folks who understand how to "tetris" an upright bass into the back of a Subaru hatchback... I see you!.
